Donald Trump's Omarosa in Atlanta to Reveal Secrets at the Super Tuesday Business Conference

(Atlanta, GA – September 17, 2007) Omarosa, Donald Trump's most famous and controversial Apprentice contestant, is coming to Atlanta on Tuesday, September 25th. Omarosa Manigault-Stallworth will address hundreds of business women during the Opening Plenary Session of the Atlanta Business League's 23rd Annual Super Tuesday Conference.

Each year Super Tuesday attracts business leaders like Stallworth, recognized as a savvy brander for leveraging her Apprentice experience into long-term media exposure and business success. As Managing Partner of America Enterprise Corporation she promises to reveal branding secrets in a session entitled, A Brand Called You held from 8:30 am – 10:00 am at the Hyatt Regency Atlanta on September 25th.

Other noteworthy participants include Spelman College President, Dr. Beverly Tatum, this year's Millennium Pacesetter Award winner along with noted philanthropist Mary N. Long. Dr. Tatum, author of Why Are All the Black Kids Sitting Together in the Cafeteria?, will be honored during the lively awards luncheon, traditionally attended by Atlanta's top corporate, civic, and community leaders.

Stallworth, Tatum and Long are examples of the diverse and accomplished women who flock to this informative business conference annually. After hearing Stallworth's words of wisdom, Super Tuesday attendees will also choose from a bevy of business enhancing workshops, peruse the exhibit hall and network during the afternoon reception.

Tickets for the one-day-only Super Tuesday Conference, including Omarosa's plenary address and the awards luncheon are $100.00 and can be purchased online at www.atlantabusinessleague.org or by calling (404)584-8126.
